Reclaiming Your Story: A conversation with Vicky Pinpin-Feinstein

Vicky discussed her process of writing, in particular, the circumstances under which she felt compelled to write a memoir of her experience as a political detainee, followed by a narrative nonfiction account of Ethiopians fleeing war, famine, or civil strife. She realizes that what she pursues as a writer is to delve deep into the many facets of “other-ness” and what happens to identity under conditions of trauma, dislocation, and crisis. The talk was followed by a Q&A.

Vicky Pinpin-Feinstein moved to the US from the Philippines after receiving a research fellowship at the East-West Center. With graduate degrees in Communications and Political Science, her career focused on research, policy, and applications of technology and society followed at the Smithsonian Institution, telecommunication companies, World Bank, AusAid, and public television. Her memoir, A Thousand Little Deaths: Growing Up Under Martial Law in the Philippines, tells her experiences as a political prisoner during the Ferdinand Marcos dictatorship. Her work with refugees in Australia inspired her to write about Ethiopian immigrants in the Washington, DC area with a completed narrative nonfiction manuscript awaiting publication. She has also published her short writing pieces in various literary journals.
